Year's End – pondering time!

Human mind is a weird device: it insists on remembering various, quite often completely random things. Albeit that particular ability seems to be less and less so vigorous with age (guilty as charged)!

So, as each year inevitably comes to an end and things slow down just enough to catch a short breath, the neuronal void is usually taken up by the flashback of all major events that happened in the last 12 months. It's no different for us here at Speed And Science.

And indeed, what a year that has been! As mentioned in my last blurb, since our humble beginnings we've added quite a few products to our collection. With our latest (just about to be released) billet Rocker Box set, we're producing a really cool top end for the beloved Shovelhead engine. Now it really looks like a start of our own product line!

As much as I would love to take the credits, I can't simply because most of it is due to you. Through countless conversations (real and virtual), back-and-forth testing, feedback, criticism (yes, there was that too) the initial ideas had evolved and have become a real, very tangible thing. That's why I love to stay engaged and be in touch with the real-world people out there, all connected with a common maniacal obsession also known as V-Twin powered motorcycles. Builders, mechanics, users and Lord knows who else – that's the ultimate discussion forum and field test of our ideas. Rest assured, we're here to support you all the way. With our Social Media presence it makes it easier for you to communicate with us; how many companies out there will answer your question on Sunday morning? Well, we do, or at least trying to. Fitment, mating parts, installation, setup – it's all part of our aftersales policy. If there's any issue with our product, we'll try our best to make it right. As simple as that.

Looking at our sales for the last year, I see our products being shipped all over the map (literally), including North America, Europe and East Asia. It feels awesome just to be able to serve you worldwide. We've also revamped our website in order to supply you with most comprehensive information possible, helping you to make an educated decision when it comes to spending your disposable income. So, things are happening with much more to come! Stay tuned my friends.

Keeping it short and sweet, we all would like to wish you an absolutely smashing New Year 2019.

Motor forward!

On behalf of Speed And Science Team, Mark "Getrow" E.
